Courage Makes the Man

A Matter of Deep Concern

power is one of growing urgency. The federal government does not make light of the problem but it soft pedals the implications involved. For their part military spokesmen are frank in voicing con-cern. Recruits are not being secured in sufficient numbers to meet current and future needs; that is, recruits of the right quality. Applications in fairly satisfactory numbers there might be, but so large a percentage fails to measure up to the required standards that the net intake falls far below the targets set as the minimum istent with this country's commitments.

All three services are feeling the pinch of too few enlistments. The RCN, for instance, invariably a favorite arm which tends to attract many young men, is not now expected to meet its 1954 objective by some 3,000 men. In view of the size of this country's naval force that is a serious deficit. Particularly is this the case in view of the obligations inherent in NATO operations, in which the RCN plays a considerable and valuable role. Army and of insufficient men to carry out their functions properly.

THE question of Canadian military man-power is one of growing temperature. constant wearing struggle to secure enough recruits. In plain terms it is a case of the services just getting by at present and no more, and only then under the handicap of insufficient men to carry out their functions memoryly.

If the picture is to change only two courses seem possible. One is to lower the entrance standards, which would mean less efficiency and an impairment of quality that would be disastrous; and thus is no solution at all. The other involves some form of universal service. This to date is the stumbling block, and one from which the federal government has shrunk. Yet it is the fair and honest course of manning the services, as all other of our NATO allies have long since recognized. Only Canada depends on voluntary enlistment and the present situation proves this ment and the present situation proves this to be a broken reed. Unless Canada faces the problem frankly it seems likely it will be forced to renege on its pledged word to the western alliance. Either that or it will continue to lag behind its allies, chaing the least it can get away with.

Mr. Nixon on Disarmament

BECAUSE of his assertion that the United States made a mistake in disarming Japan after the last war, the U.S. vice-president. Mr. Richard Nixon has been accused in some quarters of tryingito lie wise after the event. Mr. Nixon's critics on that score appear to be unfair to him. From reports of his speech in Tokyo one cannot find anything to suggest that the vice-president voiced or implied a rebuke to the allies, or to the United States for writing into the new Japanese constitution a perpetual renunciation of arms. Rather his statement has the ring of frank acknowledgment, without tinge of criticism, that what is now seen as an error of judgment was of a kind anyone might have made in the circumstances of the time.

made in the circumstances of the time.

Much has occurred to change Western outlook in the eight years which have, elapsed since the war's end. In-1945 Japan was an enemy vanguished after a war of exceptional brutality. While Japan had been compelled to concede defeat, there were many who would have been hard to convince that inwardly she accepted it would have been difficult at that time also to foresee or to persuade the American people that the Western world so soon would need to accord Japan the status of an ally.

When Mr. Nixon describes total disarmament as a mistake, we do not think he means as some have inferred that dis-armament was a blunder. What he actu-ally said was that it was a mistake because we misjudged the intentions of the Soviet "we misjudged the intentions of the Soviet Union." That was a "misjudgment." according to the vice-president, for which most segments of U.S. opinion must bear responsibility. There is a refreshing air of honesty in that admission; and no pretense can be detected in it that the present administration, if it had been confronted by the Conditions which existed in 1945 and during the subsquent period of occuby the conditions which existed in 1945 and during the subsequent period of occu-pation, would not have taken the same

In a land where to maintain "face" is so important Mr. Nixon's speech may not encourage belief in American infallibility, and may cause some bewilderment among the Japanese people. It should, however, help'to explain to them why the U.S., having disarmed them in 1945 for all time—as was the intention then—now has reversed that a street to maintain the street of th reversed that policy and is encouraging Japan to pearm. Japan's reluctance in that recard must be overcome if America's aim to make the country primarily respon-sible for its own defense against possible Communist aggression is to be attained.

Another memory of the same time is of one of the oldest garages in Victoria which stood on, I think, the southeast corner of Parliament Square. There was only one oar for hire, and the owner lived out at Straw. berry Vale, driving in and home again in a star-bottomed huggy with an old pony. He frequently gave me a lift home, as he passed my house in Strawberry Vale.

BRITISH MILITARY PENSIONS

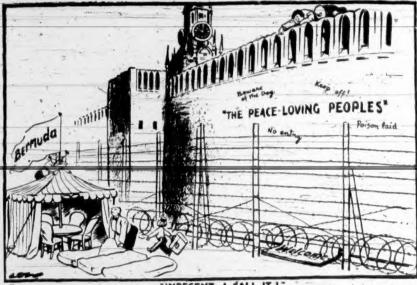

Sir. I wonder how many retired army offi-cers in these islands listened with amazement as I did to the BBC broadcast of the news from London on November 25. Sir Winston, reply-Sir. I read with interest the letter of

A bankers' librarian once described bank notes as a fascinating hobby once you get to know them, which of course is to cite the great diffi-culty getting to know them. Intimately, I mean.

Not that I know anyone who doesn't think them fascinating even on slender acquaintance: Perhaps the greatest phonemenon the world has known is the fatal attraction that is to be found in dollar bills, pound is to be soon in doing only professions, and their equivalents.

Actually only an engraver could do justice to the bank note as an abstract thing of beauty. People might pretend it was the missival rustle they make that enslaved them, or the artistry with which some faces are eithed on these oblong slips of paper, not forgetting the figures, which are all important. The pre-tence, however, would be thinner even than the bank note.

I am given to understand, that the earliest bank notes known are Chinese imperial notes of the 13th century, which seems far enough to dip backwards whether one is a bank teller or just collects bank notice as a hobby. At any rate they were made of easily/frayed paper with red or black lettering. I doubt that any of them are around nowadays and if there are they have of Course long if there are they have of course long since ceased to perambulate.

The story goes that the red ink was really blood, so they cannot be extant or modern science would have determined this point with extendibute. Margin Poly, that surfly sampler of foreign places, mentioned them as circulating all over the eastern world of his day.

There is no such risk attached to hank notes, and the average roll, as is affectionately termed, is seldom if ever too large to be easily_arcom-modated. enthusiasts kept asking to see pir-tures of airplanes used in the First World War. The museum officials at last went into their stores and brought out all the pictures given them by the Ministry of Information after the 1914-18 war. There were nearly 4.000,000 different photographs and from them was compiled a com-plete set showing every kind of plane flown at the time, except one, the portant one for Sylvia Gray saw several BE12's and even BE12a's. It is known that 39 BE12b's were made against the Zeppelin and Botha raids agh, but they have no picture of it now and all the museum knows is that it was probably a biplane like the BE12's were but that it had a Hispano-Suiza envine.

Now they are asking for anyone who had anything to do with the 12b's to help them out and museum authorities and old aircraft enthusiasts are waiting on tenderhooks to see if the picture of the missing plane will turn up.

There is no money attached to the hunt, which has no particular mili-tary significance but it is fust that the people concerned want the satis-faction of fitting the last piece into the aeronautical ligraw puzzle.

Look into the deal!

Over to Olds you'll go!

It's time you took the wheel of a 253 Oldsmobile and saw for yourself what thes great cars - the Super 88 and Classic 98 - have to offer you. You'll find that these wonderful Ohlsmobiles are packed with features—standard equipment features, mind ou — that are unavailable in any other car, at any price! For instance, only Oldsmobile offers you the high compression power, economy and performance of the famous "Rocket" engine, proven high-compression leader in the automotive field. Only Oldsmolale offers you the graceful distinction of Power Styling, styling that sets your Oldsmobile apart from any other car on the road. Only Oldsmobile offers you the comfort and safety of Power-Rule Chassis, the rugged N-member frame around which Oldsmobile is built. And when it comes to extra-cost options, no car at any price can offer all the wondrous things that Oldsmobile has in store for you. Yes, take the wheel of an Oldsmobile, look into the deal, and over to Oldsmobile you'll go!

Never underestimate the heart of a woman! . . . she's practical and rational . . . but, with it all, she's basically feminine. Gay, romantic, a trifle frivolous . . a woman loves to be admired, to be a charmer as irresistable as the fairy princess she envied in childhood. as irresistable as the fairy princess she envied in childhood. Christmas is the time to cater to this femininity . . . beautiful, shadow-sheer hylons are the way. Their filmy glamour, tinted just right, gives that one-in-a-million boost to her ego . . appeals to her fashion sense. She knows and wants famous-name hylons, appreciates their styling, their fashion-right beiges, deep browns, taupes, greys. So choose for HER from the wide selection now at the Bay!

Candidates Set Up Downtown Offices

Mayoralty Campaign Going High-Pressure

into a high-pressure, all-out contest, complete with campaign headquarters and quarter-page ads. Four of the five candidates have hired downtown campaign headquarters staffed with "phoners and mailers" and fronted with six-foot signs.

Oldtimers in the city say they haven't seen the like of it for years. The 1951, four-way battle was a quiet, reserved afair compared to this one.

Mayor Claude Harrison has two headquarters.

Mayor Claude Harrison has two neadquarters, one on Government Street (four doors from the business office of another candidate, Donald Smith), and the other on Broughton. Ald. Percy Scurrah has hired an unused taxi stand on Yates near the Dominion Hotel, and Mr. Smith, a store on Broad Street. Charles Hunt has confined his postering so far to bumper cards carrying the motto, "Hunt for the Best Mayor."
